

Research in the group

The major research interest of Marina de Bernard's lab is the characterization of bacterial products endowed with immunomodulant properties, with the aim at disclosing the mechanisms responsible for the escape of pathogens from the immune response and the onset of chronic infections/inflammations.

The lab is also interested on the practical side, i.e. the development of novel immune therapeutic strategies based on the administration of these bacterial products.